

Wireless Feature Give Business an Edge

Across the world, wireless phones are changing the way business is done. The changes are most obvious with wireless voice service, but over the last few years, wireless features have become an essential tool for both small and large businesses.

Here are highlights of just a few of the wireless features available at ACS:

Text Messaging

Text Messaging is the simplest and least expensive wireless feature. This feature has become a staple of the business world for providing a quick, easy way to communicate, and increase overall business efficiency.

Chuck Grimm, President of CNK Computer Solutions, Inc. in Kenai uses text messaging to monitor client servers.

“The monitoring software I use has the capability to send a text message to my phone,” said Grimm. “I have the software set to send me a text message immediately if there is a critical systems error or catastrophic failure, like having a server or a hard drive fail. The text message allows me to respond to an error before it becomes a system failure. It’s a great benefit for me and my customers.”

When to Text

- When an email or voice conversation is not convenient or possible.
- When one message needs to be sent quickly to multiple people.
- To reduce minute usage or eliminate long distance charges (ACS Unlimited Global Texting allows you to send unlimited texts globally for $6 per month).

Text messages can also be sent via email. This is a good way to reach a person who’s not able to take a call. The sender just emails the recipient’s phone number (907xxxxxx@msg.acsalaska.com), and the email arrives on their phone as a text.

Pic & Video Messaging

Picture and video messaging has been a fun tool for consumers, but recently businesses have picked up on the usefulness of this wireless feature.

When to Picture or Video Message

- Share information immediately with clients or co-workers.
- Keep the picture or video on your phone for quick access.
- Share a picture or video rather than trying to relay a detailed description.
- Email the picture or video to yourself to archive.
